

BUT BRIEF SURCEASE FROM LABOR HAS FACTORY GIRL.

Work Is Crowded Even Into the Sunday of Dora Traub, but She Enjoys the Luxury of a Change.

HOW DORA TRAUB SPENDS SUNDAY.

Rises at 8 o'clock. Does the housework until noon. Cooks dinner. Sewing until 6 o'clock. Prepares supper. Dresses and sits at the door of her home until 10 o'clock.

Sunday as passed Dora Traub, one of the striking garment-makers, has its labor of its own, but in performing them she enjoys the luxury of a change. She has, too, the pleasure of sleeping late and of waking to know that the dreary grind of the factory is not ahead of her.

But there is plenty housework to do, meals to cook, and in the afternoon there is generally more sewing. The evening is the only period in the week that she enjoys complete relaxation.

This time she passes usually sitting on the stoop of her Chrysler street home.

"If it wasn't for Sunday," says Dora Traub, "I guess we'd all been crazy by now."

Sunday morning Dora Traub sleeps until 8 o'clock. Usually on Saturday night her walk on Chrysler street or whatever outing she has had lasts later than 10 o'clock. She has breakfast between 8 and 9 o'clock, and then takes most of the responsibility of the Sunday housework from her mother's shoulders. For Sunday is also the only day her mother has to rest.

"But I don't mind doing housework, nor anything, so I don't have to hurry," says the girl.

The leisurely washing of dishes, sweeping of floors and making of beds on Sunday mornings is therefore looked upon as a sort of luxury of chance from the rest of the week. This occupies most of the forenoon, and then Dora Traub prepares dinner.

A morning of housework in a room in which the range is already cooking the pot-roast for dinner, the task of preparing the dinner and clearing the table and washing the dishes afterward make up half her Sunday.

The Sunday dinner is little different from the supper of other days of the week. It consists of soup made from the meat left from the preceding day, of a pot-roast, potatoes, chicken and coffee. Sometimes there is a pie or a bit of fruit.

At the Needle Again.

And all the needlework Dora Traub now. Work for herself and work for her mother are always at hand. If there is nothing new to be made there is something old to be made over. She shows with pride some pretty striped shirt waists and a little dainty dress, with ruffles and tucks all over it, and many carefully pressed ribbons which she has made herself. There is a hat with mouline lace, also the work of her hands. All her own mending and darning she has to do, and her darning is an exquisite in the factory.

The sun glazes in the little Chrysler street room all the afternoon, but there

GIRL GARMENT WORKER'S IDEAS OF AMUSEMENT.

"I don't know what the other theatres are like. I've been to the Thalia. Ain't they just the same?"

"Yes, ain't crossed on the ferry for a long time. I have done it, though."

"Yes, I'd like to go out on the ferry, but of course, not far."

"Manhattan Beach and Brighton? I don't know much about them places."

"The thing we all of us most want is the same hours we've been havin'."

Dora Traub sits nearly every Sunday and sews till supper time.

"Nobody could say it was wrong," she says, "what other time have I got?"

Sometimes a few of the girls in the neighborhood come in and laugh and gossip for a while. Sometimes as she sits by the open window groups of men and girls whom she knows pass and stand outside. But she usually sews on pretty steadily.

"I go out Sunday afternoons," says Dora Traub, "it's with mother most often. We take a walk."

Sometimes a Trolley Ride.

Occasional Sunday afternoon trolley rides are to be reckoned, but these are expensive luxuries and not often to be counted in the week's pleasures.

Sunday's supper is a cold one usually, and consists of a bit of cold meat and bread and coffee—always coffee. Then come Sunday evening, and that is the day when the whole week when Dora Traub does nothing.

Dressed in the pretty dimity, she sits on the front doorstep deliberately doing nothing and enjoying every minute of it. Christie street on Sunday night is much more than usually quiet and unexciting, and the excitement is considered well worth watching. If anybody hasn't been outside through the week he is on Sunday night. People come and go, and those who sit on their doorsteps could really see something.

Here are some of the questions about what pleasures she would like to have Dora Traub was asked and her answers:

"Pleasures She Would Like."

"Wouldn't you like to go uptown sometimes to one of the theatres?"

"Where?" asked Dora Traub. "I don't know what those theatres are," she said, "when I was asked 'I've been to the Thalia.' They're just the same, ain't they?"

"Would you like to travel?" she asked, "to go off on the cars?"

"Oh, well," said Dora Traub, "yes, but not very far."

"Do you ever read anything?"

"Yes," she said, "the paper when I can't read it."

"Do you ever cross on the ferry?"

"Not for a long time. I have, though," answered the girl. "They're just the same, ain't they?"

"Would you like to go to Manhattan Beach or Brighton?"

"I don't know much about them places," said Dora Traub.

"The thing we all of us want most."

CONY COST HIM $130.

Jacobson Has Despoiler Arrested and May Get Money Back.

Henry McDermott, of No. 52 Forty-ninth street, Brooklyn, was arrested by the Coney Island Police Court today charged with working a con game.

The complaining witness against him was Harry Jacobson, of No. 23 Houston street.

Jacobson explained that he met McDermott at Coney Island and was seeing the sights with him, when a third man joined them and proposed a game of dice for the drink.

Then they began playing for money, and Jacobson lost $130. He called a policeman and McDermott was arrested. The money was found in his pockets. The stranger escaped.

The Annual Charities Benefit Sale.

Once every year, in the month of July, we donate a certain percentage of a week's gross sales to charities that in our humble opinion are performing commendable work and in which we take a personal interest.

The percentage of Monday's sales will go to the New York Herald Free Ice Fund.

The percentage of Tuesday's sales will go to the Nazareth Day Nursery.

The percentage of Wednesday's sales will go to the New York Tribune Fresh Air Fund.

The percentage of Thursday's sales will be divided between the Jersey City Journal and Newark News Fresh Air Funds; and it is gratifying to state that the sales of each of these 4 days having been in excess of last year, each of the 5 charities named will receive a larger amount than last year. The percentage of to-morrow's sales will go to

The New York World's Sick Babies' Fund, and we hope that the results achieved will again prove larger than on the corresponding day last year.

Will You Aid a Worthy Charity By Trading Here To-Morrow?

We are making special efforts—offering great inducements in order to force sales to the highest attainable point—as you can readily see by reading the details following:

The Semi-Annual Stock Correcting Sale

In progress this week affords buying and money-saving opportunities that even this store can afford to offer but once in six months.

As explained before, we carry no goods from season to season. Prior to stock takings (Aug. 1 and Jan. 1) we sell out—be the loss what it may—all lots of merchandise that in our judgment should not be inventoried. It stands to reason that, in a business running up into the millions annually, errors should creep in, and these we correct twice a year. Expensive as it may seem to do this—we take great losses—it would be more expensive still in the long run not to do it.

But please do not judge the scope of the sale by the extent of our advertisements. We do not print one bargain in twenty—why should we? People know all about this sale—we have had eight or nine of them already—and the mere announcement of it crowds the store. Come, and come at once. You'll not regret it. You'll find bargains galore on every one of our five great selling floors—bargains that we are proud to offer—bargains that you will be glad to buy!

The Clearance Sale in the Clothing Store is about to come to a close. Not that you have had enough; on the contrary, the demand seems to be growing as the sale proceeds. But we have just about sold all the suits that we care to lose money on, our stock is down to where we wanted it to be, and so your opportunity to get superior Summer Suits at bargain prices must come to an end.

We Will Continue the Sale, However, for Friday and Saturday

so as not to disappoint any one. If you want a new suit, speak now or hold us blameless.

Men's $10 to $18 fine Summer Suits now on 6.95

Young Men's $8.50 to $12 Suits, now on sale 5.00

Men's Flannel Coats and Trousers, worth up to $7, now for 3.00

All our Boys' Washable Suits, sizes 3 to 8, now 50c

We sha'n't go into details this time. Come and see the suits. You'll admit them—one and all—to be the greatest clothing values that ever happened.
